Our Shared Illusions

The Gap between Actuality and Reality, from the Unmanifest to Manifest and Our Shared Illusions

“We live in illusion and the appearance of things. There is a reality. We are that reality. When you understand this, you see that you are nothing, and being nothing, you are everything. That is all.” ~ Kalu Rinpoche

Today I was thinking of the movie "The Secret." It is one of the biggest hits in the history of publishing; surpassed only by the Harry Potter series...I could be wrong.

When it first came out, I bought a dozen of it and gave them to friends as present. In hindsight, I probably did them an injustice, because the manifestation process requires that one be so in tuned with this universe, but it really is not as simple as they portrayed in the movie.

There is a gap between thoughts and physical reality and that gap is not easily traversed. It is true there are people who can manifest anything at will, but those very same people will not for they have to be responsible for the consequences of their creations.

The true manifestors create what they need and destroy at will. They have no need to hang on to anything or to own anything.

For this I will give an example where a devotee of Krishna, a King, who was at war with another kingdom. The King and his men had just finished a battle, lost heavily and needed to rest for the night to fight another battle in the morning. His men were tired and hungry as they had been fighting for a while. They came into an enchanted forest where there supposedly lived a hermit endowed with magical powers. When they got to the forest, the King removed his sandals and ordered his men to do the same, to show respect. Legend had it that this hermit was Krishna in human form.

After the King removed his sandals before entering the forest, the sage came out of nowhere and said, “O King, you have come to the right place. For tonight, you and your men shall rest and be entertained, for you have shown great respect by removing your sandals before going in and Lord Krishna is pleased. Please have your men unsaddle their horses and have the horses get food and water.”

So the King and his men entered the forest and laid down their weapons and unsaddled their horses, and behold, a giant waterfall appeared right before their very eyes, and a number of tents to shelter them for the night, and food, and wine, everything that a man could ever want for a feast. And beautiful women were serving his soldiers. And the horses were watered and fed, and the king was grateful to the hermit and to Lord Krishna.

When morning came, the men did not want to leave the forest to fight, they wanted to stay in the forest and be fed and pampered. But the King had a war to fight and so he went to the hermit and told him of his predicament. And the hermit blew a breath and the King and the men fell asleep and when they woke up, all the signs of what they experienced the night before were gone and the forest only had trees and a small stream, but they were rested and fed, and they saddled the horses to go and fight.

Was it just a dream? We can never tell. All men dreamt the same dream then. Very much like our universe.

Our universe is the manifestation of a collective consciousness. It cannot be undone. It can be rearranged much like the props in a stage play or an opera, but it is here. When those that can undo it decide, they have to have the collective agreement of those who built it in the first place. Unfortunately, some of those who agreed are no longer around and hence the seeming solidity of everything.

There is actuality and there is reality. We do not distinguish between the two, normally, but we must.

The definitions in the Merriam Webster Online Dictionary are presented here.

Definition of ACTUALITY

1: the quality or state of being actual

2: something that is actual : fact, reality

— in actuality

: in actual fact

See actuality defined for English-language learners »

Examples of ACTUALITY

The actuality was quite different from the theory.

First Known Use of ACTUALITY

Related to ACTUALITY

Synonyms: existence, corporeality, corporeality, reality, subsistence, thingness

Antonyms: inexistence, nonbeing, nonexistence, nothingness, unreality

Definition of REALITY

1: the quality or state of being real

2a (1) : a real event, entity, or state of affairs (2) : the totality of real things and events

b : something that is neither derivative nor dependent but exists necessarily

3: television programming that features videos of actual occurrences (as a police chase, stunt, or natural disaster) —often used attributively

— in reality

: in actual fact

See reality defined for English-language learners »

Examples of REALITY

the difference between fiction and reality

The reality is that we can't afford to buy a house.

He used television as an escape from reality.

They made the plan a reality.

First Known Use of REALITY

Related to REALITY

Synonyms: actuality, case, materiality, fact

Antonyms: fantasy (also phantasy), fiction, illusion

We all live in illusion. The illusion of the solidity of things. A common agreement. When we create thoughts, we have actuality. The physical world is a common reality and yet superimposed within it is another world that we can create and destroy at will, at any moment.

The best way I can think of to illustrate it at this point is that the phenomenal world is a stage. We are the crew.

We can assume any role and we do, at any one point in time. We can rearrange the set, change the play, the character, remove things, and add things to it. But we remain. We are the only constants.

When we realize this, the world ceases to be a battlefield, rather it becomes a garden to enjoy. Imagine being able to create giant waterfalls at will. It does exist, if only in our minds, and in our minds, truly the world, or many worlds can be a playground.

This is what the gift of the imagination is about.
